Music, Language, and Culture

Anthropology 3853: Spring 2016

Why do people everywhere find music so compelling, listening to songs every hour of every day, even when watching films or listening to our iPhones?

How does language support this ordinary obsession, with lyrics that provide further meaning, also through the use of socially-textured sounds?

How do both language and music set the stage for the expression of human culture the world over?