(Anthropology: Brazil)
ANTH 4953-002
Spring 2016
Prof. Misha Klein

Known for its blending of Native, African, European, and Asian populations, Brazil has long been an important point of contrast with the U.S. with regard to racial constructions and race relations. This course will examine contradictions between Brazil’s infamous social inequalities and the much-celebrated notion of “racial democracy.” We will also examine the histories and identities of the diverse cultural groups who make up this fascinating country.
