Paul Juhasz

Seduced by the spirit of the red earth, Paul Juhasz has recently moved from Pennsylvania to Oklahoma City. Believing that visceral experience is an essential force behind expression and imagination, he has worked at an Amazon fulfillment center, manned a junk truck, and driven for Uber, material he's drawn on for his poetry, fiction, and creative non-fiction. He has read at dozens of conferences and festivals across the country, including Scissortail and the Woody Guthrie Festival. His work has appeared in bioStories, Red River Review, Red Earth Review, Voices de la Luna, inward Review, Dragon Poet Review, Tejasovido, Concho River Review, Ain't Gonna Be Treated This Way, and Speak Your Mind. His first book, Fulfillment: Diary of a Warehouse Picker was published by Fine Dog Press in July, 2020.
