

Author's Name Goes Here

Instructor Name

Course Name & Number

Assignment Due Date

Paper Title at Top of First Page of Text

Ailwood, Sarah. Jane Austen's Men: Rewriting Masculinity in the Romantic Era. Routledge, Taylor & Francis Group, 2021.

Source type: single-author book

This is a sample annotation. After your citation (MLA 9 used here), you include a summary about the text you have read. What does the source say about the topic? Try to give a summary that is representative of the entire document. For example, if the source is a research paper, give at least one sentence for each major section: introduction/background, research question(s), methods, results/findings, and conclusion. This section should be written in the third person in an objective, straightforward manner. You can use words and phrases that refer to sources (see: phrasebank.manchester.ac.uk) to help you describe what the author or source argues, claims, defines, identifies, indicates, proposes, or suggests. The end of your annotation features your evaluation. How does this source fit or not fit with your project? How could you use this source to support your research? Here you may critique or assess the utility of the source for your project. Some writers put these sentences in the first person while others keep them in the third person.

NOTE: Because the next citation would have been separated from its annotation, we've moved the citation for Boarcas entirely to the next page. Normally, there wouldn't be this much white space.

Boarcas, Camelia. "Feminine Consciousness in Jane Austen's Novels." Journal of Research in Gender Studies, vol. 4, no. 2, July 2014, pp. 1021–28.

Source
type:
journal
article

This is a sample annotation. After your citation (MLA 9 used here), you include a summary about the text you have read. What does the source say about the topic? Try to give a summary that is representative of the entire document. For example, if the source is a research paper, give at least one sentence for each major section: introduction/background, research question(s), methods, results/findings, and conclusion. This section should be written in the third person in an objective, straightforward manner. You can use words and phrases that refer to sources (see: phrasebank.manchester.ac.uk) to help you describe what the author or source argues, claims, defines, identifies, indicates, proposes, or suggests. The end of your annotation features your evaluation. How does this source fit or not fit with your project? How could you use this source to support your research? Here you may critique or assess the utility of the source for your project. Some writers put these sentences in the first person while others keep them in the third person.

In Defence of Mrs Bennet | Video Essay | Pride & Prejudice. Directed by Roisin's Reading, 2020. YouTube, <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=6fTsV4e8jM8>.

Source
type:
YouTube video

This is a sample annotation. After your citation (MLA 9 used here), you include a summary about the text you have read. What does the source say about the topic? Try to give a summary that is representative of the entire document. For example, if the source is a research paper, give at least one sentence for each major section: introduction/background, research question(s), methods, results/findings, and conclusion. This section should be written in the third person in an objective, straightforward manner. You can use words and phrases that refer to sources (see: phrasebank.manchester.ac.uk) to help you describe what the author or source argues, claims, defines, identifies, indicates, proposes, or suggests. The end of your annotation features your evaluation. How does this source fit or not fit with your project? How could you use this source to support your research? Here you may critique or assess the utility of the source for your project. Some writers put these sentences in the first person while others keep them in the third person.

Lynch, Deidre. "See Jane Elope; Why Are So Many Of Jane Austen's Admirers Eager To See Their Literary Heroine Get Hitched?: [National Edition]." National Post, 8 Aug. 2007, p. A13.

Source
type: news
article

This is a sample annotation. After your citation (MLA 9 used here), you include a summary about the text you have read. What does the source say about the topic? Try to give a summary that is representative of the entire document. For example, if the source is a research paper, give at least one sentence for each major section: introduction/background, research question(s), methods, results/findings, and conclusion. This section should be written in the third person in an objective, straightforward manner. You can use words and phrases that refer to sources (see: phrasebank.manchester.ac.uk) to help you describe what the author or source argues, claims, defines, identifies, indicates, proposes, or suggests. The end of your annotation features your evaluation. How does this source fit or not fit with your project? How could you use this source to support your research? Here you may critique or assess the utility of the source for your project. Some writers put these sentences in the first person while others keep them in the third person.

Sylwia. "Elizabeth's Love for Darcy: Holy Matrimony." Mending My Own Pen, 9 Apr. 2010,

Source
type: blog post

<https://austenette.wordpress.com/2009/04/10/elizabeths-love-for-darcy-and-holy-matrimony/>.

This is a sample annotation. After your citation (MLA 9 used here), you include a summary about the text you have read. What does the source say about the topic? Try to give a summary that is representative of the entire document. For example, if the source is a research paper, give at least one sentence for each major section: introduction/background, research question(s), methods, results/findings, and conclusion. This section should be written in the third person in an objective, straightforward manner. You can use words and phrases that refer to sources (see: phrasebank.manchester.ac.uk) to help you describe what the author or source argues, claims, defines, identifies, indicates, proposes, or suggests. The end of your annotation features your evaluation. How does this source fit or not fit with your project? How could you use this source to support your research? Here you may critique or assess the utility of the source for your project. Some writers put these sentences in the first person while others keep them in the third person.

For more details about setting up a paper in MLA format, head to the MLA's website: <https://style.mla.org/>

This document was created by Dr. Ashton Foley-Schramm, Associate Director, at the University of Oklahoma's Writing Center. Created 2024 under Creative Commons license BY NC SA.

CC BY-NC-SA: This license allows reusers to distribute, remix, adapt, and build upon the material in any medium or format for noncommercial purposes only, and only so long as attribution is given to the creator. If you remix, adapt, or build upon the material, you must license the modified material under identical terms.